

amplification reaction

A reaction which replaces the conventional reaction used in a particular determination so that a more favourable measurement can be made. The sequence can be repeated to provide a further favourable increase in measurement.

Source:

PAC, 1982, 54, 2553 (Recommendations on use of the term amplification reactions)
on page 2554